

Write a brief summary answering the question, “What is critical thinking?” As you write your summary, you may wish to return to any or all of the resources above as needed.

b. Write a brief summary answering the question, “How is the conception of critical thinking presented here different from conceptions of critical thinking that I have previously encountered?”

c. Write briefly about how you can begin to apply this module’s content to your daily life.

d. Write a little about yourself: your name, title, school or professional affiliation, your motivation for taking this course, and what you hope to learn in it. We want to be on a first-name basis throughout the course.

What I learnt from this module : Critical thinking is a process of analysing and evaluating the thoughts while with the aim to improve it and make it self directed, self disciplined. Most importantly, I learnt that how critical thinkings entails the commitment to overcoming out Native egocentrism and sociocentrism. I wish to return to the pages that tells me more about the details of elements of reason, universal intellectual standards, and virtues and practice those questions in my daily life to make my thinking more improved and productive.

Before learnt from this module, I thought that critical thinking is to think from any thing from different possible aspects. After this module, I came to know about the comprehensive overview of the critical thinking and learnt the practical and elaborate approach to get my thinking more critical.

As these are the most valuable introductory lessons that I learnt about the critical thinking, so I will use the elements of critical thinking during writing my papers, articles and presentation. So this would significantly assist me to be more productive in my academic pursuits. Moreover, I will develop these virtues in myself to become empathetic and open to learn during discussion with my peers, teachers and friends

I am Hamayun Hussain , an undergraduate student in apolitical science from Pakistan. I am also studying at the online University to learn more diverse skills and make myself more competent in my field while aiming to prepare myself for my future goals of civil services. As I have to appear in the most competitive exams of civil services and have th goals to pursue my postgraduate studies at abroad, so these my goals have motivated me to get enrolled in this course and make myself comment while learning and interacting with the people from the diverse backgrounds. This foundation also allows me to get access to the most valuable resources to learn more and make myself more critical minded individual and bring incredible value to myself and my society.